

10 YEARS AFTER 1997

CIVIC EXCHANGE has produced a four part series of publications that review various aspects of post-handover Hong Kong. Reflections of Leadership: Tung Chee Hwa and Donald Tsang, 1997-2007; From Nowhere to Nowhere: A Review of Constitutional Development Hong Kong 1997-2007; Idling Engine: Hong Kong's Environmental Policy in a Ten Year Stall 1997-2007; and Still Holding our Breath: A Review of Air Quality Policy in Hong Kong 1997-2007 examine different facets of the HKSAR government's policy decisions over the past ten years in the timely and controversial areas of constitutional reform, air pollution, and environmental policy. Drawing on a wide variety of sources, the authors' analysis of the successes, failures, and future direction of the HKSAR government's policies reveals a deep scholarship and understanding of the issues, as well as an in-depth look at the inner workings of Hong Kong's power structure. The insights, criticisms and recommendations that these books provide are invaluable for anyone with an interest in the politics and policies of Hong Kong: where they have come from, how they stand today, and the likely changes of tomorrow.

Reflections of Leadership: Tung Chee Hwa and Donald Tsang, 1997-2007 examines how Tung Chee Hwa and Donald Tsang led Hong Kong. Their visions, styles, beliefs, and choices made a substantial difference to how Hong Kong has been governed in the last ten years. The authors use the major speeches and decisions of the Chief Executives that best embody their values, assumptions and ideas about government and policy to analyse their leadership.

From Nowhere to Nowhere : A Review of Constitutional Development Hong Kong 1997-2007 examines Hong Kong's failure to make significant constitutional progress during the past decade. It tells the story of how Beijing and the HKSAR Government stalled constitutional reform and seized control of the community's discussion on political development. The authors explore the origins of the HKSAR's peculiar constitutional structure and its impact on governance, conflict resolution, and the development of political leadership.

Idling Engine: Hong Kong's Environmental Policy in a Ten Year Stall 1997-2007 provides a thorough critique of Hong Kong's problematic environmental policy since 1997. The authors address the major environmental issues facing Hong Kong, what progress has been made, the significant challenges that remain, and the reasons behind the success of some policies and failure in the vision and implementation of others.

Still Holding our Breath: A Review of Air Quality Policy in Hong Kong 1997-2007 examines Hong Kong's air quality policy in the ten years since 1997. Despite some progress, regulation is often either inadequate and set goals, even when met, do not meaningfully address the most important issues. This book provides an in-depth examination of Hong Kong's air pollution in light of the scope and efficacy of existing policy.
